

3. Genetic variations that alter gene activity or protein function can introduce different traits in an organism. If a trait is advantageous and helps the individual survive and reproduce, the genetic variation is more likely to be passed to the next generation (a process known as natural selection).

4. Scientists date and categorize fossils to determine when the organisms lived relative to each other. The resulting fossil record tells the story of the past and shows the evolution of forms over millions of years.

5. Because Extinction is often caused by a change in environmental conditions. When conditions change, some species possess adaptations that allow them to survive and reproduce, while others do not.

6. A balanced ecosystem also provides us with plants that have medicinal properties. So, when ecosystems aren't maintained, our health can be affected too. That's why, when you add to the conservation of endangered species, you're also contributing towards humans' well-being.

7. Most scientists would agree unequivocally that humans have greatly affected the process of evolution, from the rise of antibiotic and pesticide resistance to the largely human-caused increase in the extinction rate. Our effect on the process of evolution even extends to our own species' evolution.

8. In natural selection, genetic mutations that are beneficial to an individual's survival are passed on through reproduction. This results in a new generation of organisms that are more likely to survive to reproduce.

9. I learn that natural selection is one of the central mechanisms of evolutionary change and is the process responsible for the evolution of adaptive features. Without a working knowledge of natural selection, it is impossible to understand how or why living things have come to exhibit their diversity and complexity.

Seeing Students Learn Science National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine, Division of Behavioral and Social Sciences and Education, Board on Testing and Assessment, Board on Science Education, Heidi Schweingruber, Alexandra Beatty, 2017-03-24 Science educators in the United States are adapting to a new vision of how students learn science Children are natural explorers and their observations and intuitions about the world around them are the foundation for science learning Unfortunately the way science has been taught in the United States has not always taken advantage of those attributes Some students who successfully complete their K 12 science classes have not really had the chance to do science for themselves in ways that harness their natural curiosity and understanding of the world around them The introduction of the Next Generation Science Standards led many states schools and districts to change curricula instruction and professional development to align with the standards Therefore existing assessments whatever their purpose cannot be used to measure the full range of activities and interactions happening in science classrooms that have adapted to these ideas because they were not designed to do so Seeing Students Learn Science is meant to help educators improve their understanding of how students learn science and guide the adaptation of their instruction and approach to assessment It includes examples of innovative assessment formats ways to embed assessments in engaging classroom activities and ideas for interpreting and using novel kinds of assessment information It provides ideas and questions educators can use to reflect on what they can adapt right away and what they can work toward more gradually
