Answer the following questions:

- 1.1 Describe the hydrologic cycle, components, and processes. The hydrologic cycle is a continuous process that moves water around the planet. It is driven by the sun, which provides the energy for evaporation. Water evaporates from the ocean and land, rises into the atmosphere, and condenses into clouds. Precipitation falls from the clouds as rain or snow. Some of the water infiltrates the ground, becoming groundwater. Some of the water runs off the land, becoming surface water. The water eventually returns to the ocean, completing the cycle.
- 1.2 Define erosion, and the following erosion parts: head, channel, meander, oxbow lake, and floodplain. Erosion is the process of wearing away the Earth's surface. It is caused by the movement of water and wind. The parts of an erosion are: head, channel, meander, oxbow lake, and floodplain. The head is the point where the erosion begins. The channel is the path that the water or wind takes. A meander is a bend in the channel. An oxbow lake is a body of water that has been cut off from the main channel. A floodplain is the area of land that is flooded by the water or wind.
- 1.3 Define drainage basin and divide. What is the difference between a drainage basin and a divide? A drainage basin is the area of land that drains into a single body of water. A divide is the line that separates two drainage basins. The difference between a drainage basin and a divide is that a drainage basin is the area of land that drains into a single body of water, while a divide is the line that separates two drainage basins.
- 1.4 Define drainage pattern, dendritic, and rectangular drainage patterns. What are the characteristics of these patterns? A drainage pattern is the way that water flows over the land. There are two main types of drainage patterns: dendritic and rectangular. A dendritic drainage pattern is one in which the water flows in a series of branching channels, like a tree. A rectangular drainage pattern is one in which the water flows in a series of straight channels, like a grid.
- 1.5 Describe how erosion, transportation, and deposition are related to the water cycle and erosion. Erosion is the process of wearing away the Earth's surface. Transportation is the process of moving the eroded material from one place to another. Deposition is the process of dropping the eroded material in a new location. These three processes are related to the water cycle because the water cycle provides the energy for erosion and transportation, and the eroded material is eventually deposited in a new location.
- 1.6 Define alluvial, river, and delta. What are the characteristics of these features? Alluvial is a term used to describe the material that is deposited by a river. A river is a large body of water that flows in a channel. A delta is a landform that is formed at the mouth of a river, where the river meets the ocean. The characteristics of these features are that alluvial material is deposited by a river, a river flows in a channel, and a delta is formed at the mouth of a river.
- 1.7 Describe how a river is controlled by its watershed, topography, and climate. A river is controlled by its watershed, topography, and climate. The watershed is the area of land that drains into the river. The topography is the shape of the land. The climate is the weather conditions in the area. These three factors control the flow of the river.
- 1.8 Describe the mechanisms of erosion: hydraulic action, abrasion, solution, and deflation. What are the characteristics of these processes? Hydraulic action is the process of wearing away the Earth's surface by the force of water. Abrasion is the process of wearing away the Earth's surface by the friction of rocks and sediment. Solution is the process of dissolving the Earth's surface. Deflation is the process of removing the Earth's surface by the wind. The characteristics of these processes are that hydraulic action is caused by the force of water, abrasion is caused by the friction of rocks and sediment, solution is caused by the dissolving of the Earth's surface, and deflation is caused by the removal of the Earth's surface by the wind.
- 1.9 Define the different types of sediment: clastic, organic, and biogenic. What are the characteristics of these types of sediment? Clastic is a type of sediment that is made of small pieces of rock and mineral. Organic is a type of sediment that is made of the remains of plants and animals. Biogenic is a type of sediment that is made of the remains of plants and animals. The characteristics of these types of sediment are that clastic is made of small pieces of rock and mineral, organic is made of the remains of plants and animals, and biogenic is made of the remains of plants and animals.
