

Three examples of pocket watches, showing the variety of designs and materials used in their construction.

The pocket watch is a small, portable timepiece that has been used for centuries. It is typically made of metal, such as brass or gold, and features a circular face with a dial and hands. The watch is usually carried in a small case or pocket, hence its name. The pocket watch was invented in the 15th century and became popular in the 16th century. It was used by nobles and the wealthy as a status symbol, and it became a common item for the middle class in the 17th and 18th centuries. The pocket watch was also used by sailors and explorers to keep track of time during long voyages.
