

Literacy Across the Curriculum: Student Literacy Projects

Ranking Connections

An Interview with Eric Gitterman, Executive Director of the Center for Children's Books

ERIC GITTERMAN: CONVERSATIONS

Eric Gitterman, executive director of the Center for Children's Books, discusses the importance of literacy projects in the classroom and how teachers can support them. He also discusses the role of the Center for Children's Books in supporting literacy projects.

Ranking Connections was originally developed by Eric and other former members of his original organization, Project for the Advancement of Literacy Education. It has been updated to reflect current research findings and includes new material on research-based teaching strategies. This interview is based on the second edition of the book.

The above quote is from Ranking Connections, © 1991, written by Eric Gitterman, with permission of the Center for Children's Books.

Ranking

Ranking is an approach to reading that emphasizes connecting children's own experiences, interests, and needs to their classroom texts and projects through shared and interactive experiences.

Ranking projects for students. In ranking projects students find their own learning when they work together, and group members can also learn from one another. For example, last year we conducted workshops about the ecology of the Amazon rain forest. One student, while researching butterflies, had a great time drawing butterflies. This student then helped other students draw butterflies.

Ranking projects help students make connections between their own experiences and those of their classroom texts. This will allow the teacher to connect the classroom with the outside world. For example, students can learn about recycling paper products from newspapers. Another student might have been assigned to present yesterday's news. Another child might have written a story about the environment. These students can share their work with the class.

Ranking projects are a teaching strategy developed by the Center for Children's Books. They are designed to help teachers support children's literacy development by encouraging them to connect their own experiences with those of their classroom texts. The Center for Children's Books is a non-profit organization that promotes literacy and reading for all children.
