2. Background

Fig. 1. Schematic diagram of the experimental setup. The subject was seated at a distance of 60 cm from the screen. The screen displayed a target area (TA) and a starting point (SP). The TA was defined by a horizontal line and a vertical line intersecting at the center. The SP was located at the bottom left corner of the TA. The subject's hand was positioned at the SP at the start of each trial. The hand was moved towards the TA by a motorized arm. The movement was controlled by a computer program that generated a sinusoidal trajectory. The hand stopped at the TA after a certain time interval. The subject was required to hold the hand steady for a certain time interval before releasing it. The release time was determined by the computer program based on the hand position at the end of the holding period. The hand was then moved back to the SP by the same motorized arm. The entire experiment was controlled by a personal computer.
