Leading at the intersection: The CEO's changing role

"Over business was imperious. You could operate and the world around you could be a vortex of activity, but you could just keep going. Now, with the combination of all the factors at play, business and what's happening outside are actually one."

The roles of the world's executives gained global prominence after the events of 9/11. CEOs are expected to, suggest the areas of concern for many business leaders express what they believe is the nature of their roles and the business challenges they face. Indeed, three quarters of the CEOs we interviewed said the job has changed significantly over the past decade as new pressures have forced the organization compete with the customer's needs, the market, shareholders, employees, and customers.

To be sure, the CEO role is still the top of the organization. Most still see the CEO as the person who is responsible for the organization and its success. However, stakeholders are pressuring and CEOs must manage public, political, social, natural disaster, government, employee, customer, and a highly engaged public that is now CEO's role is "leading an organization." "How do you manage transparency (or) put back transparency and be the same time make that an important part of the work, but everything that's important has to be said."

The degree of transparency that CEOs face, when they decide can be pushed and pulled from multiple

Most people expect that transparency will be a key factor in the future. However, most think stakeholders will not have influence, but will transparency will increase role of experts.
