

Conclusions

It is here that the research can both summarise his or her findings and suggest applications of those findings. Again, such applications should be realistic and no attempt should be made to extrapolate beyond the data. Arguably, it is impossible to generalise from qualitative data (because of the sampling methods, the ways of collecting data and the methods of analysis) – and most would say that it is not the point of doing qualitative research to generalise in this way. However, it is sometimes a temptation for the research to project his or her chance to reflect on his or her own practice and, as appropriate, be critical of the approach adopted here. While there can never be a standardised template for writing research reports, certain features always occur in any account.

Writing a Biomedical Research Paper Brian Budgell, 2008-12-05 All of us in biomedicine understand the urgency of getting experimental results into print as quickly as possible Yet this critical step in the cascade from research conception to publication receives almost no attention in our formal training It is as if we have been put to sea without a compass Our collective failure to achieve widespread literacy in our own language Biomedical Language seriously impedes the important process of disseminating new biomedical knowledge and thereby improving the human condition It is also a significant personal concern for researchers and clinicians in the highly competitive publish or perish environment of a temporary academia. Of course if we are clever or lucky enough to come up with that Nobel Prize winning discovery great science will carry the day and we are likely to get published even if our writing is fairly horrid. But most of us who publish are bread and butter scientists. We compete for space in journals which may only accept 10% or 20% of the submissions that they receive each year. For us convincing engaging writing will make the difference between being published or rejected or at least it will make the difference between being published on the first submission or having to go through a number of revisions or journals. None of this is to propose that good writing can make a silk purse out of a sow's ear. Scientific content is the sine qua non of biomedical writing.
