If the plan doesn't cover certain services, you may have to pay for them out of pocket. This is why it's important to read the plan's description of benefits carefully. The plan should list the services it covers, the amounts it will pay, and the conditions under which it will pay. It should also list the services it doesn't cover, and the reasons why. For example, a plan might not cover certain types of medical equipment, or it might not cover certain types of therapy. It might also not cover certain types of care, such as long-term care or hospice care. By reading the plan's description of benefits carefully, you can make sure you understand what the plan will and won't pay for, and you can make sure you choose a plan that meets your needs.
