Abstract Background The epidemiological transition of the ageing population has been a major challenge for the health care system. The rapid rate of change is underpinned by ageing factors. Older people are disproportionately affected by chronic diseases, and the prevalence of these conditions increases with age. The aim of this study was to explore the experiences of older people with chronic diseases and the impact of these conditions on their quality of life. Methods A qualitative study was conducted using semi-structured interviews with 15 older people (aged 65 and over) who had at least one chronic disease. The data were analysed using thematic analysis. Results The study identified four main themes: (1) the experience of living with a chronic disease, (2) the impact of the disease on daily life, (3) the role of the health care system, and (4) the need for support. Conclusion The study highlights the importance of understanding the experiences of older people with chronic diseases and the impact of these conditions on their quality of life. The findings suggest that the health care system should focus on providing support and resources to older people with chronic diseases.
