These theoretical issues remain unresolved when faced by contemporary scholars and practitioners. In light of our contributions, and any other progress concerning these issues, future scholars are asked to contribute further to a full understanding of the issues that pervade the different management and organizational issues that the management faculty can more effectively address today. In closing, we hope that the contributions included in this special issue will encourage colleagues, scholars, and students to continue.

These findings have important implications for the design of the training program. The results suggest that the training program should be designed to address the specific needs of the participants, such as the need for information on the legal and ethical aspects of the profession, and the need for information on the current state of the profession. The results also suggest that the training program should be designed to be interactive and engaging, and that it should provide opportunities for participants to practice their skills and to receive feedback from the trainers.
