municipal wastewaters and is often an expected constituent of typical treatment plant wastewater streams. However, a growing number of wastewater treatment plants (WWTPs) across the USA have detected cyanide in chlorinated effluents at levels exceeding influent concentrations. Because water quality criteria and related discharge limits are typically low, some of these WWTPs periodically exceed effluent cyanide standards. Potential causes include cyanide formation during wastewater chlorination processes, the presence of interferences that cause false negatives and false positives caused by artifacts of sample handling or analytical techniques. The possible causes of the apparent cyanide formation phenomenon were investigated in this study. Development of Practical Methods to Assess the Presence of Bacterial Pathogens in Water. W. A. Yanko, 2004-03-01. The objective of this project was to develop and evaluate a practical technique to indicate the probability of the presence of bacterial pathogens in receiving waters. A practical method was defined as one that would limit the use of defined culture based microbiological methods and would be based on 1) validating indicator organisms that predicted the presence of pathogens or 2) detection of pathogens by polymerase chain reaction (PCR) based assays. The study also assessed the utility of PCR based technology for bacterial pathogen detection with respect to technology transfer to a wider range of water and wastewater facilities. Evaluation of Microbial Risk Assessment Techniques and Applications. J. A. Soller, A. W. Olivieri, 2003-12-01. This investigation reviewed and evaluated methodologies used for microbial risk assessment with respect to their applicability for reclaimed water applications. The investigation was comprised of five primary components: a comprehensive database of articles, reports, and books describing microbial risk assessment methodologies was established and reviewed; risk assessment techniques and models were identified for estimating the public health risk from exposure to microorganisms via reclaimed water applications; two models were identified for further evaluation: a static individual based and a dynamic population based. In the third component, the two models were evaluated to differentiate between the conditions under which models predict similar and substantially different estimations of risk. Through numerical simulation, exposure pathogen combinations were identified when it may be appropriate to use the less complex static model. Case study risk assessment scenarios demonstrated the model selection process for three realistic yet hypothetical reclaimed water scenarios. The fourth component presents a constraint analysis for existing reuse regulations. The constraint analysis is carried out by documenting the existing reuse regulations. The constraint analysis is carried out by documenting the existing regs in three states for landscape irrigation and uses that comparison as a starting point to identify how microbial risk assessment may be useful within the context of existing and potential future water reuse regulations. The investigation concludes by identifying criteria for a computer interface that would allow regulatory and/or municipal agencies/utilities to take advantage of the analysis discussed in the report This publication can also be purchased and downloaded via Pay Per View on Water Intelligence Online click on the Pay Per View icon below Use of Novel Techniques to Quantify Phenotypes in Biological Treatment Process K. G. Robinson,2004-01-01 This research attempts to evaluate nitrification treatment performance in combined carbon nitrogen municipal wastewater reactors using traditional physical chemical methods and modern molecular techniques Bench scale activated sludge reactors were operated at different SRTs under varying DO levels and temperatures over a 21 month period Real time PCR assays were used to determine cell concentrations of total bacterial 16S rDNA a gross measure of biomass content the amoA gene a measure of ammonia oxidizing bacteria AOB and the Nitrospira 16S rDNA gene a measure of nitrite oxidizing bacteria NOB As expected gravimetric biomass and total bacterial 16S rDNA levels increased with increasing SRT Ammonia oxidation rates and N oligotropha type AOB concentrations did not follow similar trends with respect to changes in SRT temperature and DO nor were they highly correlated The concentration of available nitrite and SRT were positively correlated with Nitrospira cell densities while DO concentration and temperature were negatively correlated with NOB levels The percentage of the total population comprised of AOB and NOB obtained with the real time PCR assays were compared to predicted values estimated from design equations using typical kinetic parameters While the percentages of NOB measured using the real time PCR assay corresponded very well with the predicted values the measured percentages of AOB were much lower than those estimated from the design equations suggesting that N oligotropha type AOB were not the dominant ammonia oxidizing species in these reactors This publication can be purchased and downloaded via Pay Per View on Water Intelligence Online click on the Pay Per View icon below

Acclimation of Nitrifiers for Activated Sludge Treatment Robert A. Zimmerman,Andrew T. Bradshaw,Don Richard,2004-06-30 Nitrification kinetics were evaluated in bench scale batch reactors fed with a synthetic wastewater containing approximately 1 000 mg ammonia nitrogen $\text{NH}_3\text{ N L}$ operated at 5 10 and 20 day solids retention times SRTs and with dewatered biosolids supernatant 1 126 to 1 680 mg $\text{NH}_3\text{ N L}$ operated at a 20 day SRT For the 5 and 10 day SRTs complete nitrification appeared to be inhibited by the presence of un ionized ammonia and un ionized nitrous acid For the 20 day SRT near complete nitrification was observed for both substrates Observed ammonium oxidation rates decreased with increasing SRT Observed yield coefficients were similar for all SRTs and substrates Fully established steady state conditions were observed at higher SRTs despite process start up and operational considerations Although it may be possible to culture a nitrifier population capable of near complete nitrification at lower SRTs the design configuration and operational strategy must mitigate the potential for un ionized ammonia and un ionized nitrous acid inhibition e g process start up at lower concentration with gradual increase to higher concentration continuous feed operation etc Batch bioaugmentation analyses were conducted in the mixed liquor suspended solids and final clarifier effluent from a non nitrifying activated sludge with seed nitrifiers developed from the 20 day SRT reactors and with biomass from a nitrifying trickling filter facility Ammonia removal was observed in all bioaugmentation analyses with no apparent lag or acclimation period. Observed ammonium oxidation rates were not significantly different between the seed and batch bioaugmentation reactors. Acclimation does not appear to be a critical obstacle for nitrifier bioaugmentation when environmental conditions e.g. temperature, pH etc. between the seed and bioaugmentation processes are not significantly different.

Post-Project Monitoring of BMP's/SUDS to Determine Performance and Whole-Life Costs L. K. Lampe, 2004-06-30

Over the past 20 years the use of Best Management Practices (BMPs) in the United States has been instrumental in reducing both the detrimental impacts to receiving water quality and the exacerbated flooding caused by urbanization and storm water drainage. More recently Sustainable Urban Drainage Systems (SUDS) have started to be used in the United Kingdom. Both SUDS and BMPs attempt to mimic the drainage patterns of the natural watershed and can also provide a degree of treatment needed to improve the quality of the water discharged to an acceptable level. The costs of conventional stormwater collection systems are determined primarily in terms of initial capital expenditure. Long term maintenance costs are absorbed by stormwater authorities that are responsible for maintaining their infrastructure as part of their asset base. Currently only a few of these responsibilities exist for BMPs and SUDS which generally incorporate surface components and are often dependent on landscaping rather than on traditional construction techniques but may require significant regular maintenance. Any potential adopting organization will require guidance on the maintenance regimes of different types of systems and how such regimes translate into long term adoption costs. The project is being conducted in two phases. Phase 1, which is the subject of this report, includes a literature review and a survey of stormwater authorities and organizations in the US and UK to identify the most commonly used BMPs and SUDS and to determine the availability of data on their cost and performance. As part of Phase 2 the operation of selected BMPs and SUDS will be monitored over a one year period in terms of pollutant removal and hydrologic/hydraulic efficiency and applicability of their design criteria and maintenance regime. The protocols developed in Phase 1 will be used to assess BMPs/SUDS performance and whole life costs.
