Programmed Inequality Mar Hicks,2018-02-23 This sobering tale of the real consequences of gender bias explores how Britain lost its early dominance in computing by systematically discriminating against its most qualified workers women Harvard Magazine In 1944 Britain led the world in electronic computing By 1974 the British computer industry was all but extinct What happened in the intervening thirty years holds lessons for all postindustrial superpowers As Britain struggled to use technology to retain its global power the nation s inability to manage its technical labor force hobbled its transition into the information age In Programmed Inequality Mar Hicks explores the story of labor feminization and gendered technocracy that undercut British efforts to computerize That failure sprang from the government s systematic neglect of its largest trained technical workforce simply because they were women Women were a hidden engine of growth in high technology from World War II to the 1960s As computing experienced a gender flip becoming male identified in the 1960s and 1970s labor problems grew into structural ones and gender discrimination caused the nation s largest computer user the civil service and sprawling public sector to make decisions that were disastrous for the British computer industry and the nation as a whole Drawing on recently opened government files personal interviews and the archives of major British computer companies Programmed Inequality takes aim at the fiction of technological meritocracy Hicks explains why even today possessing technical skill is not enough to ensure that women will rise to the top in science and technology fields Programmed Inequality shows how the disappearance of women from the field had grave macroeconomic consequences for Britain and why the United States risks repeating those errors in the twenty first century T.C.
