

Chapter 22: Economic Growth & Global Development

Four basic and often conflicting development strategies exist in nations with the resources:

1. The poor should raise domestic savings, attract more foreign direct investment (FDI), and export more. Many countries in Latin America experienced rapid & successful growth until the 1980s, but then stagnated.	2. In developing, poor nations, high-quality basic services (health, education, etc.) are essential to growth. China's economic growth since 1978 followed a similar path. It achieved this strategy by first giving citizens (especially peasants) property rights and ensuring the legal basis.
3. Poorer nations should adopt lower income protection policies. Developing nations having experienced successful economic growth have followed protection policies.	4. The LDC has a limited resource. Developing nations should be cautious.
5. The LDC should use FDI, but not as a development strategy. Developing nations that pursue international investment policies, such as high foreign ownership limits, may have more success in the future. But in the past, many have failed.	6. A high foreign debt burden may be a problem for LDC. Developing nations have high foreign debt. Some have failed to pay it back.
7. Countries should use the international system to protect their interests. Developing nations have been able to attract investment from developed nations, but not enough.	8. In general, the international system is not working well. Developing nations have been able to attract investment from developed nations, but not enough.
9. The World Bank, the Inter-American Development Bank, and the World Trade Organization (WTO) are the main international organizations. Developing nations are often in a difficult position. They are often in a difficult position. They are often in a difficult position.	10. Developing nations are often in a difficult position. Developing nations are often in a difficult position.
