Abstract

As the temperature decreases, the rate of molecular motion decreases and the particles "stick" together. The molecules forming these ice crystals are held together by hydrogen bonds, the same type of intermolecular forces that hold water molecules together in the liquid state. The hydrogen bonds between water molecules are shown in Figure 12.10. The hydrogen bonds are the same type of intermolecular forces that hold water molecules together in the liquid state. The hydrogen bonds are the same type of intermolecular forces that hold water molecules together in the liquid state.
