Abstract

Students' experiences in a health planning and policy classroom. The experiences were reported to help students and future educators understand and address the needs of students with disabilities, and to provide information and support to help them become successful students and citizens. The authors (Lee & Lee) note that because of the rapid pace that health care is taking on in the twenty-first century, it is important that preparation for that workforce be made as quickly as possible. As the authors note, understanding disability, preparation of the health workforce, addressing the needs of students with disabilities, and preparing to work with students with disabilities are all topics that are relevant and essential to the health workforce. The authors suggest that preparing students with disabilities to work in the health workforce is an essential part of the health workforce. Multi-level management systems, in general, are preferred whenever systems must be able to operate under changing conditions. But to meet this requirement, the system must be capable of processing incoming data from the operating manager. Otherwise, the information in the management information system will be outdated as the data on operations is not incorporated. Indeed, the system may have made major changes, which are corrected only when the data is being re-entered. Moreover, the system will have the management data which the operating manager needs.
