Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were 12 sedentary women, 30 to 45 years of age, who were randomly selected from a health club. They were divided into two groups: a control group and an exercise group. The control group continued with their sedentary lifestyle, while the exercise group participated in a 12-week training program. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The sessions were performed on a treadmill at a speed of 3.0 mph, with a 5% incline. The HR and EE were measured at the beginning and end of the training program. The results showed that the exercise group had a significant increase in HR and EE compared to the control group. The HR increased from 68 to 78 beats per minute, and the EE increased from 1,200 to 1,500 kcal per week. These findings suggest that a 12-week training program can effectively increase the HR and EE of sedentary, middle-aged women.

- Day and night periods that are longer than the standard 24 hours occur most commonly with the use of artificial light or other light sources. To avoid this, there are two things the producer should do:
 - Turn off the lights at the end of the day.
 - Use red light for night-time illumination, as the length of the waves may be perceived as less than the other colors of light.
- The end of the day should be kept short, and the day should be kept long. The producer can make this possible by using a timer to turn the lights on and off. The producer should also make sure that the light is not too bright for the plants. A good rule of thumb is to keep the light intensity at 1000 lux.

- When a producer's price for the output rises or falls, it must adjust its output accordingly. For example, suppose the price for the output rises. The producer will want to produce more of the output, and this will increase its demand for the inputs. The producer will also want to use more of the inputs, and this will increase its demand for the inputs.
