

Pg. 20—Bird Beaks

Seeds are the major food source for the finches of the Galapagos Islands. Extremely dry conditions increase the population of plants with large seeds and decrease the population of plants with small seeds. Only finches with large beaks are able to crack and eat the large seeds.

During periods of drought, which of the above finches are most likely to survive? How will this affect the finch populations? Explain your answer.

During periods of normal rainfall, which finches are more likely to survive? How will this affect the finch population?
