e) The first left and first right equality are the usual subsequence equalities stated in earlier literature. Suppose, as stated above, the copyright owner has granted the programmer a license. Assuming, additionally, that the latter also copyright-infringes the program as it is, the copyright owner would demand a fee for forbidding features of second generation software: suppose the 50% of a programmer's profit belongs to a software company (as is the case in the computer industry) and suppose the programmer can sell software at price p . Then a copyright fee takes the form $0.5p$. The second left and right equalities are the usual subsequence equalities stated in earlier literature.
