

Radiometer AQT90 FLEX Troponin T METHOD AND SAMPLE COLLECTION

1. PURPOSE AND SCOPE

The purpose of this document is to describe the procedure for performing a cardiac Troponin T (TnT) test using the Radiometer AQT90 FLEX analyser. The Radiometer AQT90 FLEX analyser can be used by healthcare professionals for measuring major cardiac blood markers. This document will be focusing on Troponin T, and further information on the other parameters can be found on their website.

2. HAZARDS

Patient Samples

All patient samples should be treated as potentially infectious and handled appropriately. Standard precautions should be employed. Gloves should be worn when processing samples, performing maintenance and troubleshooting procedures.

3. CLINICAL SIGNIFICANCE

Acute Coronary Syndrome (ACS) is a term used to describe a group of conditions resulting from insufficient blood flow to the heart muscle.¹ These conditions range from atypical chest discomfort and non specific electrocardiographic changes to a large ST-segment elevation, myocardial infarction and cardiogenic shock.² Symptoms can include chest pain including tightness and heaviness in the chest, discomfort in the arms and upper body, shortness of breath and other constitutional symptoms including sweating, nausea and light-headedness.¹

Diagnosis of ACS is based on a complete medical history, physical examination, electrocardiogram to evaluate the electrical activity of the heart and blood tests to evaluate the presence of biological markers resulting from cardiac cell injury.¹

Troponin T & I are members of a group of cardiac regulatory proteins which function to regulate the calcium mediated interaction of muscle filaments actin and myosin resulting in contraction and relaxation of striated muscle.⁴ Troponin T is almost exclusive to the myocardium, with small amounts expressed in skeletal muscle not detectable in current Troponin T assays.⁴ Insufficient blood flow and oxygen supply to the heart muscle causes necrosis of the myocardium and subsequent release of Troponin T & I into the bloodstream.⁵

Troponin T in the bloodstream rises to detectable levels after 4-6 hours, peaks at 10-12 hours and can be detected for up to 14 days post infarction.^{5,6} Troponin I is released from necrotic cardiac myocytes into the bloodstream within hours (~4-8 hours) after the onset of chest pain. The peak TnI concentration is generally reached in 12-48 hours.⁷ Troponin I serum levels
