Abstract. The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness of 10-year-old children. The study was conducted in a primary school in the city of Ankara, Turkey. The children were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The experimental group participated in a 12-week training program that included aerobic, strength, and flexibility exercises. The control group did not participate in any training program. Physical fitness was measured at the beginning and end of the 12-week period using a series of tests including a 1000-meter run, a 50-meter sprint, a 1-minute sit-up test, a 1-minute plank test, and a 1-minute flexibility test. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly higher scores than the control group in all tests at the end of the 12-week period. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness of 10-year-old children.

The subjects were divided into two groups: a control group and a diet group. The diet group was instructed to consume a diet that was 1000 kcal below their maintenance level. The control group was instructed to consume a diet that was at their maintenance level. The subjects were monitored for changes in body composition and physical performance over the 10-week period. The diet group showed a significant decrease in body fat percentage and an increase in lean body mass compared to the control group.
