

Student Exploration: Populations and Samples

Background: Frequency distributions describe the distribution of a population. A sample

Prerequisite Knowledge: Students should know how to draw using the compass.

1. Frequency distributions summarize descriptive statistics about each individual sample or value. Frequency distributions allow us to compare each sample with the distribution of all the samples that they are from. The following graph illustrates the frequency distribution of test results, without grouping.

2. How would you describe the shape of this distribution?

Answer: It shows that the shape of the test scores is not an approximately normal distribution as it has a peak.

3. In the above graph on right, sketch what you think the frequency distribution might look like if the scores were all normally distributed. How would this look?

Student Exploration

4. In frequency distributions, a population is made up of all the individuals of a population. A sample is a group of individuals from a population or a subset of values in a population. The mean is the average of the values in the population. The standard deviation is the average of the values in the population.

5. The test results distribution in the above graph is approximately normal. The frequency distribution of the scores, which were normally distributed, without grouping, will look like the following graph.

What is the normal distribution? (The mean is 100, the standard deviation is 10.)

6. How do the distributions appear when all the data is included? (The distribution is normal.) How do the distributions appear when the data is grouped? (The distribution is normal.)

7. What is the mean of each graph? (The mean is 100, the mean is 100.)
