As an old woman, Rukmani often imagines that her deceased husband, Nathan , appears to her in her sleep, and they pass the night peacefully together. In the morning, he always vanishes.
As the sun rises, Rukmani greets her children, especially Puli , whom she has adopted and brought home to her native village. When she asks if he is happy with her, he always nods. Anyway, Rukmani knows it's useless to question her decisions: "what's done is done." Puli's hands have been destroyed by leprosy, but the local doctor, Kenny , and Rukmani's son Selvam have prevented the disease from spreading to Puli's limbs.
Rukmani's sight is fading, but she can still see the hospital where Selvam and Kenny work.

hostile by a simple kinship analogy one may often speak of the stepmother tongue Whilst fully aware of the current debates in postcolonial theory John Skinner is also conscious of its sometimes unhelpful complexities and contradictions The focus of this study is thus firmly on the fictional practice of the writers discussed He offers the reader an insight into the diversity and rewards of contemporary anglophone fiction whilst analysing some eighty individual texts A uniquely comprehensive guide the book will be welcomed by students and teachers of postcolonial literature Books in Print Supplement ,2002
