In fact, the American people are a very diverse group, and this diversity is reflected in their attitudes towards the environment. For example, while many Americans are concerned about the environment, others are more concerned about the economy or other issues. This diversity of attitudes is one of the challenges that environmental groups face when they try to mobilize the public. However, it is also one of the strengths of the American environmental movement, as it allows groups to focus on the issues that are most important to their members.
