Analytical Technology in Nutrition Analysis Jose M. Miranda,2020-05-27 Due to increasing global food needs as a result of population growth the use of new food sources has gained interest in the last decade However the inclusion of new foods in our diet as well as the increased interest of the population in consuming foods with better nutritional properties has increased the need for adequate food analytical methods This monographic issue presents innovative methods of chemical analysis of foods as well as the nutritional and chemical characterization of foods whose consumption is expected to increase worldwide in the coming years Using household consumption and expenditure surveys to make inferences about food consumption, nutrient intakes and nutrition status Fiedler, John L.,Mwangi, Dena M.,2016-11-21 Household consumption and expenditure surveys HCES are multipurpose surveys that are routinely conducted to collect data on household food consumption and availability in more than 120 countries HCES are increasingly being used to calculate proxy estimates of food consumption nutrient intakes and nutrition status often at the individual level Rarely however do they collect information on meal participation despite growing evidence that it is an increasingly important and variable component of the quantity of food consumed or available in a household This paper explores the significance of adjusting for meal participation in making inferences about apparent food consumption and nutrient intakes It focuses on two distinct sets of additional information requirements for enhancing the reliability and precision of measures of food consumption 1 individual household members and household guests meal eating behaviors and 2 the number and apparent nutritional significance of meals While the most comprehensive and precise accounting of intakes of individual food consumption and nutrients requires both types of information the magnitude of the changes required in HCES questionnaires to capture them is likely to be prohibitive Consequently for many HCES a second best approach may be the most effective method at least in the short term The paper empirically explores some of the relatively few HCES that currently attempt to capture some of these information requirements In addition it assesses their value added to prioritize the global agenda for strengthening HCES measurement of food consumption in support of more evidence based nutrition policy making Diet transformation in Africa Hassen, Ibrahim Worku, Dereje, Mekdim, Minten, Bart, Hirvonen, Kalle, 2016-04-06 Africa's food systems are changing fast amid rapid economic growth emerging urbanization and structural transformation In this study we use four rounds of nationally representative data from Ethiopia to examine changes in household food consumption patterns over a period of unprecedented economic growth We find that while there is a general decline in the share of food in the total consumption basket of households in Ethiopia food quantities and intake of calories have increased considerably over the period 1996 to 2011 This was mostly driven by improvements in household incomes as shown using decomposition analysis Furthermore the content of the food basket is changing with a gradual shift towards high value foods such as animal products fruits and vegetables and processed foods However irrespective of the level of income a heavy focus on starchy staples in the Ethiopian diet remains Overall this diet transformation has important implications for the food security debate and for agricultural and food policy in the country InfoWorld, 1982-03-01 InfoWorld is targeted to Senior IT professionals Content is segmented into Channels and Topic Centers InfoWorld also celebrates people companies and projects

Dale A. Schoeller, M.
