Taylor Kollman,2025-04-01 In a world that commodifies feminism is adapting romance novels for small and big screen projects and the Romance Writers Association is evolving to a more inclusive representative group it is imperative for researchers to reevaluate the cultural assumptions and gender norming work happening in the romance genre It is time to question the cultural capital of traditional archetypes explore the experience of romance readers and question how romance and cultural studies researchers create quantitative qualitative and mixed methods research This work centers around a data set collected with a revised version of Janice Radway's Reading the Romance survey that will be shared with all the authors of this anthology. By having access to this pool, authors will have the opportunity to explore different elements of reader experience and cultural norms in romance fiction and potentially reflect on changes since Janice Radway's seminal work. The norms and negotiations readers experience while consuming romance is especially interesting as romancelandia becomes a more mainstream part of popular culture with the popularity of Bridgerton and romance series like Ice Planet Barbarians exploding on BookTok. No other book in romance or popular culture studies identifies a data set as the connecting element and to do so creates an exciting opportunity to create a more inclusive study of popular romance, offer truly interdisciplinary research on the question of how readers read romance and generate diverse areas of future scholarship. This edited volume explores multiple issues in romance fiction based on survey data from real romance readers. An updated version of Janice Radway's influential survey looking at romance readers in the early 1980s, this time scholars explore romance readers' habits and attitudes in the twenty-first century. Each contributor in this volume uses the same survey data to make unique statements about gender, intersectionality, popular fiction, and popular culture. By using a common data set but approaching it from different perspectives, this unique volume is able to apply multiple methodologies to the same subject.

Reading Today Heta Pyrhönen, Janna Kantola, 2018-01-15. New technologies are changing our reading habits. Laptops, e-readers, tablets, and other handheld devices supply new platforms for reading, and we must learn to manage them by scrolling, clicking, or tapping. Reading Today places reading in current literary and cultural contexts in order to analyse how these contexts challenge our conceptions of who reads, what reading is, how we read, where we read, and for what purposes, and then responds to the questions this analysis raises: Is our reading experience becoming a flat one? And does reading in a media environment favour quick reading? Alongside these questions, the contributors unpack emerging strategies of reading. They consider, for example, how paying attention to readers' emotional reactions as an indispensable component of reading affects our conception of the reading process. Other chapters consider how reading can be explored through such topics as experimental literature, the contemporary encyclopedic novel, and the healing power of books.

Reading the Romance Janice A. Radway, 2009-11-18. Originally published in 1984, Reading the Romance challenges popular and often demeaning myths about why romantic fiction, one of publishing's most lucrative categories, captivates millions of women readers. Among those who have disparaged romance reading are feminists, literary critics, and theorists of mass culture. They claim that romances enforce the woman reader's dependence on men and acceptance of the repressive ideology purveyed by popular culture. Radway questions such claims, arguing that critical attention must shift from the text itself, taken in isolation, to the complex social event of reading. She examines that event from the complicated business of publishing and distribution to the individual reader's engagement with the text. Radway's provocative approach combines reader response criticism with anthropology and feminist psychology. Asking readers themselves to explore their reading motives, habits, and rewards, she conducted interviews in a midwestern town with forty two romance readers whom she met through Dorothy Evans a chain bookstore employee who has earned a reputation as an expert on romantic fiction Evans defends her customers choice of entertainment reading romances she tells Radway is no more harmful than watching sports on television We read books so we won't cry is the poignant explanation one woman offers for her reading habit Indeed Radway found that while the women she studied devote themselves to nurturing their families these wives and mothers receive insufficient devotion or nurturance in return In romances the women find not only escape from the demanding and often tiresome routines of their lives but also a hero who supplies the tenderness and admiring attention that they have learned not to expect The heroines admired by Radway's group defy the expected stereotypes they are strong independent and intelligent That such characters often find themselves to be victims of male aggression and almost always resign themselves to accepting conventional roles in life has less to do Radway argues with the women readers fantasies and choices than with their need to deal with a fear of masculine dominance These romance readers resent not only the limited choices in their own lives but the patronizing attitude that men especially express toward their reading tastes In fact women read romances both to protest and to escape temporarily the narrowly defined role prescribed for them by a patriarchal culture Paradoxically the books that they read make conventional roles for women seem desirable It is this complex relationship between culture text and woman reader that Radway urges feminists to address Romance readers she argues should be encouraged to deliver their protests in the arena of actual social relations rather than to act them out in the solitude of the imagination In a new introduction Janice Radway places the book within the context of current scholarship and offers both an explanation and critique of the study's limitations
