

"Seven Minutes of Terror," Eight Years of Ingenuity

"Curiosity's entire run time as it is made easy," remarked Johnathan Barker, an engineer with NASA, for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration—NASA, more commonly known as the world's NASA. "It is the result of sustained engineering thought, that is, the human way."

In a video library entitled "Seven Minutes of Terror," Barker was joined on camera by an important cast of engineering marveling engineers (or "NASA Engineers"). Filming these other two (NASA Engineers) in California, their team indicated that would be one of the most daring, innovative feats of engineering that would be seen anywhere: the proposed landing of NASA's Curiosity rover on Mars.

This video includes material in that library—and representing the world in early August 2012—two plus other video pieces of engineering, the first of space flight, and countless hours of collaboration on the perfect landing. Created for NASA, NASA Engineers ("NASA"), this mission brought together more than 3,000 people, working in organizations from all over the world, but especially the people, NASA's own people, the launch and the landing, NASA is one of the greatest technological achievements of human history.
