

SEVENTH SESSION

Resolution Session

Mr. Norman Zysblat presided over this Session when the main controversy arose over resolutions aimed at ensuring the democratic election of British delegates to the forthcoming Zionist Congress. A motion by Y.P.Z. called for "Direct Elections" as the only true democratic method involving all those who had registered in the "Stand Up and Be Counted" Campaign. An amendment by Habonim proposed making it clear that the Elections should be not only democratic, but also "direct". During the protracted discussion, with innumerable interruptions from both the platform and the floor, youth delegates asserted that the Z.F. leaders intended once again to select the British delegation behind closed doors.

On behalf of the platform Miss Barwell recalled that when direct elections were held in 1960, the vast majority of the Zionist electorate—shekel holders—had not even bothered to register their votes and a vast sum of money was therefore needlessly spent. Mr. Sidney L. Shipton in support of this argument urged that the "indirect" method be adopted through setting up an Electoral College. Each of the Zionist Parties at its own Conference would elect its prospective delegates.

After several recounts the amendment calling for "direct elections" to Congress was carried by 103 to 100 votes. However, on the amended motion as a whole the Resolution was lost by 106 votes to 103.

SOVIET JEWRY SESSION

This Session took the form of a Public Demonstration over which Mr. I. Nathani presided, and was the climax of the day's proceedings.
