Where We Live, Work and Play Patrick Novotny, 2000-08-30 Numerous studies have revealed that the poor disproportionately bear the burden of environmental problems in America today Issues range from higher levels of poisonous wastes carbon dioxide and ozone to greater than normal incidences of asthma and lead poisoning The environmental justice movement which has emerged in working class and low income African American and Latino communities since the early 1990s is an effort that is reinterpreting the definition of the environment as where we live work and play to connect new constituencies traditionally outside of the postwar environmental movement Novotny documents this expanding constituency through case studies of four community groups ranging from South Central Los Angeles to Louisiana Environmental racism is understood as yet another type of discrimination which results in a high incidence of environmental concerns in poorer communities due to what many activists see as discriminatory land use practices decisions by industry that intentionally locate hazardous wastes in these communities and the uneven enforcement of environmental regulations by federal state and local officials Community leaders have added environmental causes to their fight against unemployment impoverishment and substandard housing This study explores various attempts to put a halt to illegal practices and to broaden public awareness of the issues involved

Cities for Sale Staci M. Zavattaro, 2013-04-29 Today's cities are competing with each other on many levels for our business for our residency for our tourism dollars for our employment and much more Especially in light of market models of governance seeping into the public sector it has become both necessary and prudent for city staff to undertake place promotion to attract many potential stakeholders In Cities for Sale Staci M. Zavattaro reveals that cities are increasingly acting like private sector public relations and marketing firms in scope value and practice To promote their cities public administrators are embracing tactics such as branding media relations in house publication and the use of volunteers or outside organizations as PR surrogates This shift in communication patterns from providing public information to city self promotion has Zavattaro argues both positive and negative implications for democratic governance and citizen participation

Li,Brendan Lewis,2021-11-29 This book is the first to systematically map the last step of the foreign investor s journey usually referred to as post investment aftercare or business retention and expansion It provides a wide range of approaches and strategies for host economies to better retain foreign investors encourage follow on expansions and achieve greater local economic embeddedness through a multi stakeholder dialogue leading to improvement of the overall business climate Global foreign direct investments reached US 1 5 trillion in 2019 but this figure reduced by over 42% in 2020 due to the pandemic Against this backdrop retaining established investors became even more important Numerous organisations all over the world are dedicated to attracting foreign companies to invest in their markets Facilitating this effort is a dynamic and competitive industry that involves international organisations supporting capacity building think tanks academia and consultants However once foreign companies decide to invest a critical question arises how can host economies grow and retain these foreign investments Many host governments could do much better as there is very little post investment support for these foreign companies to help them grow their businesses throughout different stages of investment business and economic cycles This is where aftercare comes in In this book the authors include diverse examples from around the world to demonstrate aftercare best practices in action This book is an essential read for all public administration staff related to FDI attraction and promotion practitioners in the private sector and FDI consultants It will also be of great interest to multilateral organisations seeking to organise seminars and training courses for capacity building The book will also benefit researchers academics and postgraduate students of international relations foreign trade and internationalisation For further information see www.aftercareexplained.com
