Source: Science 10 Learner's Material

Figure 2.2 shows the parts of the female reproductive system. The female reproductive system performs female sexual and child-bearing functions. It consists of a pair of gonads or the ovaries, fallopian tube or oviduct, the uterus, the vagina, and the external genitalia or the vulva. Each organ performs related functions such as to produce eggs, to produce hormones, to receive the sperm cells that will fertilize the eggs, and to provide for the development of the embryo.

The following describes the function of each part:

Part	Function
Ovary	produces egg cells
Fallopian Tube or Oviduct	The passageway of eggs from the ovary to the uterus and the same place where the egg is fertilized
Uterus	develops the fertilized egg
Vagina	receives the penis of the male during mating

Read on to get more key information about these parts.

The Ovaries

There are two ovaries each comparable to the size of an almond nut in every female. It is suspended in the pelvic cavity by a ligament. The ligament extends from each ovary to the lateral body wall, and the ovarian ligament. The ovary contains an ovarian follicle, which contains an oocyte or the female germ cell. When follicles mature, they expand and rupture to release the egg. This process is called ovulation. After ovulation, the remaining cells of the ruptured follicle transform into a glandular structure known as the corpus luteum.

Fallopian Tubes

The fallopian tubes extend from the area of the ovaries to the uterus. The long and thin processes called fimbriae surround the opening of each uterine tube. Fertilization usually occurs in the part of the uterine tube near the ovary.

Uterus

The uterus is as big as a medium-sized pear. Internally, the uterine cavity continues through the cervix as the cervical canal, which opens into the vagina. The larger rounded part is directed superiorly. The part of the uterus superior to the entrance of the uterine tubes is called the fundus. The main part is called the body, and the narrower part is the cervix, directed inferiorly.
