

The Late republic revision

What was the Constitution?	<ul style="list-style-type: none">- The official title of Rome was 'senatus populusque Romanus', translating to 'the senate and people of Rome'. The third group was the magistrates, an integral part of the state.- Rome was developed from an agricultural society where aristocratic landowners were the chief and employers and decision-makers. This class would form the senatorial class, who helped run the state due to their inclusion. Members of the senate were entitled to stand from annual magistrate jobs.- This process worked for more than 400 years, with the wealthy upper classes providing for the poor, in turn work for them and then the rich would take on the responsibility of decision-making, doing an unpaid service to the state and people.
The Senate	<ul style="list-style-type: none">- By the time of the late republic, with the dictatorship of Sulla, the senate numbered 600, with all members serving the state either in military or administrative capacity.- The Senate controlled the expenditure of Rome, including collecting taxes.- These decisions made by the Senate, senatus consultum (SC), were bit legally binding but were considered as good advice and convention normally meant that SC would be adopted and put forward for laws.- As magistrates came from the senatorial class, it was beneficial for them individually and collectively to promote the ideas and suggestions of the Senate.- Families associated with the role of a consul were elevated to nobles, distinguishing themselves further.
The Magistrates	Magistrates held their positions for one year. Under the republic, they'd hold great power but due to the limitation of time, it was designed to curb individuals from gaining too much power. Different stages in the hierarchy (cursus honorum) <ol style="list-style-type: none">1. Quaestor: 20 elected annually and minimum age of 30, with entry to the senate.2. Aedile: 4 elected annually, minimum age of 36, in charge of public buildings, infrastructure, food supply and the organisation of public games, gaining influence within Rome.3. Praetor: 8 elected annually, minimum age of 39, primary function
