

Nature vs. Nurture

Nature vs Nurture is a debate between scientists about what makes people who they are. Some people believe that we are born with certain traits and abilities, while others believe that we are shaped by our environment. Both of these ideas have a lot of evidence behind them, but it's difficult to know for sure which one is right. In this article, we'll explore the debate and see what the science has to say about it.

One of the main arguments for nature is that some people are born with certain traits and abilities that are not learned from their environment. For example, some people are born with a high IQ, while others are born with a lower IQ. This is often explained by the fact that some people have a higher number of neurons in their brains, which allows them to process information more quickly and efficiently. Other people have a lower number of neurons, which makes it more difficult for them to process information. This is often referred to as the "nature" side of the debate.

On the other hand, there is a lot of evidence to suggest that our environment plays a huge role in shaping who we are. For example, children who are raised in a supportive and nurturing environment are more likely to have a higher IQ and better mental health than children who are raised in a neglectful or abusive environment. This is often referred to as the "nurture" side of the debate. The fact that our environment can have such a big impact on who we are suggests that we are not born with all of our traits and abilities, but that they are shaped by our environment.

Overall, the debate between nature and nurture is still going on, and there is a lot of evidence on both sides. While some people believe that we are born with certain traits and abilities, others believe that we are shaped by our environment. The truth is, it's probably a combination of both. We are born with certain traits and abilities, but our environment plays a huge role in shaping who we are. This is why it's so important to create a supportive and nurturing environment for all children, so that they can reach their full potential.

Conclusion

The debate between nature and nurture is a complex one, and there is a lot of evidence on both sides. While some people believe that we are born with certain traits and abilities, others believe that we are shaped by our environment. The truth is, it's probably a combination of both. We are born with certain traits and abilities, but our environment plays a huge role in shaping who we are. This is why it's so important to create a supportive and nurturing environment for all children, so that they can reach their full potential.

and Cultural Factors John W. Berry, S.H. Irvine, 2013-11-11 Against the background of NATO's Istanbul conference of 1971 Cronbach and Drenth 1972 the Kingston conference shows that great progress has been made by the community of cross cultural psychologists The progress is as much in the psychology of the investigators as in the investigations being reported In 1971 the investigators were mostly strangers to each other Behind their reports lay radically different field experiences disparate research traditions and mutually contradictory social ideals Istanbul was not a Tower of Babel but participants did speak past each other Now a community exists thanks to the meetings of NATO and the International Association for Cross Cultural Psychology to flourishing journals and the Triandis et al 1980 Handbook The members tend to know each other can anticipate how their formulations will fall on the ears of others and accept superficially divergent approaches as making up a collective enterprise Ten years ago there was open conflict between those who confronted exotic peoples with traditional tests and applied traditional interpretations to the responses and the relativists who insisted that tasks test taking and interpretation cannot be standardized in the ways that matter Today's investigators are conscious of the need to revalidate tasks carried into alien settings they often prefer to redesign the mode of presentation and to attune the subject to test taking They face the difficulties squarely and recognize that even the best means of coping are only partially successful
