

Research Paper on School Uniforms: Creating Equality for Adolescents Essay

Introduction

It was thought that uniforms could help adolescents with their academics because it shows them responsibility, but researchers found that there is no direct correlation (Oppenheimer, 2017). There is, however, substantial evidence supporting the behavioral outcomes of wearing uniforms. Uniforms had their first start in England in 1222 but in the 16th century, uniforms made their debut in recorded history. As time went on, uniforms started to become associated with private schools with children who are raised in the upper class. There was even one college that implemented top hats until 1972 (Meleen, 1972). What are the benefits of wearing school uniforms? In the United States, many behavioral changes wearing uniforms can contribute to including paying more attention to classwork, differentiating who is allowed on campuses, putting a stop to supporting gang affiliation, and giving students discipline and responsibility.

To start, children who wear uniforms pay more attention to classwork. There is always a dress code that students who don't wear uniforms have to follow. This is implemented to keep children from focusing all their attention on flashy clothes that make them stand out. By reducing the time spent on choosing outfits or maintaining a particular image, kids can focus on their studies (Mahalangu, 2017). When students were in uniforms, they would have fewer distractions and thus focus their attention on doing classwork. For instance, if a kid feels the need to show off new clothes, all of their focus is on themselves.

Further, a student has fewer distractions and thus focus their energy on doing only school work. Therefore, this would create a better learning environment for students. Not only does this interfere with school work, but it can also lead to narcissism. We live in an era where social perception is one of the leading causes of depression. Getting constantly judged by your peers is very difficult to deal with and can be avoided by wearing uniforms. Research has also established that wearing school uniforms boost morale and gives students a positive attitude to approach studies and classwork. A positive attitude would not only help the individual students, but it would be able to support the whole class in general.

Another benefit of uniforms is the fact that it is easier to spot strangers on campus. There is a sense of safety on school campuses with uniforms because of the ability to identify a stranger. With school shootings on the rise, it is imperative to pay attention to the people roaming the campus. Uniforms within the school vicinity would create a safe environment for students and the faculty in general. Shootings in schools that have been going on have been done by people that are not students, by ensuring that all the students in the faculty wear uniform, such people that are a threat to the security of students would be eliminated. Students can also be spotted when they misbehave when in public such as when they are in town or park for a school or class function, thus making the discipline of such students to be tight. This can help their behavior in class because students know they can be easily spotted if they are breaking the dress code. An adolescent wearing crazy socks or bows in their hair is easy to identify. To add to safety, every non-student should have to walk through an office of some sort to be cleared to walk on campus. This helps with the protection of not
