AIR INDUCTION SYSTEM - DESCRIPTION AND OPERATION

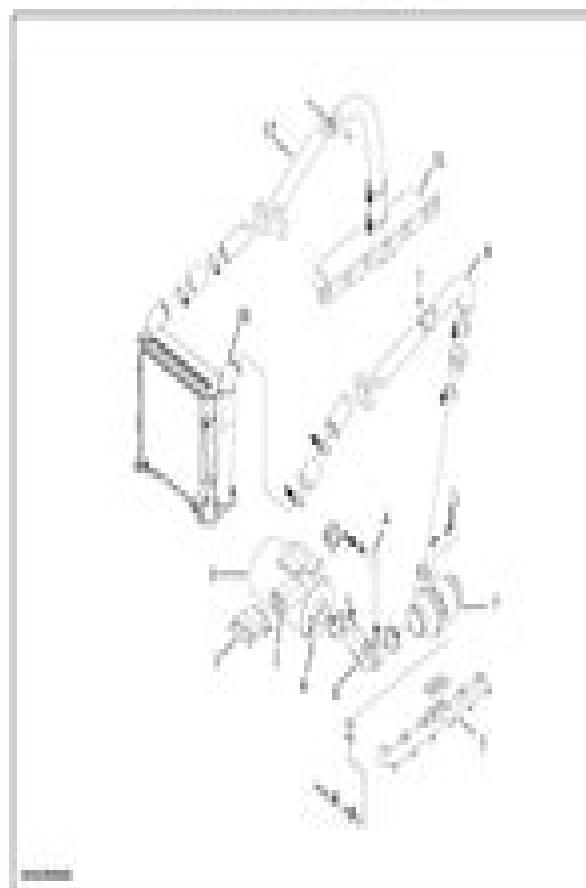

10

The Thrift air induction system is a forced induction system consisting of an air induction pump (7) as pressure (8) which is connected to the air filter housing (9). The air filter housing contains an inlet air filter element and an inner air filter element. An air filter element (10) is mounted in the air filter housing (9) between two air filter elements. The air filter housing (9) is connected to the intake manifold (11) by means of a duct (12).

Flow in a duct through the air filter, the mass of air drawn out of the air stream passing to the component rate of the engine (airflow) is measured by a differential pressure sensor.

The advantage of comparing the α and β levels is, perhaps, the most obvious (10). The α is a more basic temperature of the air. The ground is more heated (11) with a lower rate of supply the process being conducted in the lower column.
