ABSTRACT

Objectives: Impaired facial emotion expression is central to schizophrenia. Extensive work has quantified these differences, but it remains unclear how patient expressions are perceived by their healthy peers and other non-trained individuals. This study examined how static facial expressions of posed and evoked emotions of patients and controls are recognized by naive observers.

Methods: Facial photographs of 6 persons with stable schizophrenia and 6 matched healthy controls expressing five universal emotions (happy, sad, anger, fear, and disgust) and neutral were selected from a previous data set. Untrained raters ($N=420$) viewed each photo and identified the expressed emotion. Repeated measures ANOVAs were used to assess differences in accuracy and error patterns between patient and control expressions.

Results: Expressions from healthy individuals were more accurately identified than those from schizophrenia patients across all conditions, except for posed sadness and evoked neutral faces, in which groups did not differ, and posed fear, in which patient expressions were more accurately identified than control expressions. Analysis of incorrect responses revealed misidentifications at neutral were most common across both groups but significantly more likely among patients.

Conclusions: Present findings demonstrate that patient expressions of emotion are poorly perceived by naive observers and support the concept of affective flattening in schizophrenia. These results highlight the real world implications of impairments in emotion expression and may shed light on potential mechanisms of impaired social functioning in schizophrenia.

1. Introduction

Impaired facial expressions of emotion represent an area of behavioral dysfunction that is central to the illness of schizophrenia and indicates both current functioning and future outcome (Gur et al., 2006). Much of our knowledge on affective flattening in schizophrenia has been based on clinical rating scales of global affect during psychiatric interviews, but the reliability of ratings of affective flattening and other negative symptoms can be problematic (Andreasen, 1997). Over the past 20 years, efforts beyond global ratings of facial expressions by a single trained or experienced rater have attempted to apply standardized procedures to examine specific face regions based on facial muscles, and quantify the degree and time course of emotional expressions. Several groups have utilized paradigms based on the Facial Action Coding System (Ekman and Friesen, 1978) to demonstrate generalized and emotion specific deficits in posed and evoked facial expressions. Findings suggested that patients do not engage the same facial muscles as controls (Aghvelli et al., 2003; Berenbaum and Oltmanns, 1992; Blanchard et al., 1994; Gaebel and Wolwer, 2004; Kohler et al., 2008b; Kring et al., 1993;
