

Abstract

These developmental opportunities for the nation's health-care workforce is a public health imperative. But it has a price tag. While health-care providers are being paid more, training, education, and research are being squeezed out. There have to be other ways to get the education, training, and research that we need to move the needle on health care.

Abstract: Physalis peruviana L., an introduced, self-seeding herbaceous perennial in the temperate zone of North America, is native to the tropics and subtropics of Central and South America. This often-ignored plant is a potential weed in grass seedbeds because of its ability to produce seedlings that resemble grass seedlings. The authors report that P. peruviana is a weed of grass seedbeds in the Pacific Northwest of the United States. The authors also report that P. peruviana is a weed of grass seedbeds in the Pacific Northwest of the United States.
