

"Twelve angry men asserts that evidence is far more important than the truth",How does TAM justify this?

A two act drama set entirely in a single "jury room of a New York state of law", Reginald Roses' dramatic play "Twelve Angry Men", centers around 12 men who are summoned with the task of making a unanimous verdict with regards to whether or not the young boy is guilty of first degree murder. The assumption that evidence is more important than the truth is explored. Rose expresses this view by emphasizing that prejudice obstructs the path of justice and the need to question what is said to be as a "fact" when examining the evidence presented. The evidence in the play is also shown to be of greater importance through the broad representation of jurors and the manner in which the play concludes. Roses' greatest message lies not whether the evidence is true or not but in the notion that evidence must prevail above all else.

Throughout the play rose asserts that the truth is difficult to establish when jurors interpret the evidence mistakenly. The play begins with the judge reminding the jurors that they are face with a "grave responsibility" as the life of a human boy is in their hands. The jurors are told to "separate the facts from the fancy", knowingly the judge is aware that some facts can be misleading. It is claimed by juror 11 that "facts may be colored by the personalities of people who present them" which is the reality when each piece of evidence is examined. When jurors deliberate the evidence given to them they discover that "the facts that are staring [them] in the face are wrong".

This is proven when a certain piece of evidence is seemingly an "unshakable testimony" of the women who claims to have seen the murder that night. The jurors examine the young woman who turns up to testify at court wearing, "Heavy make-up, Dyed hair, Brand new clothes that should have been worn by a younger woman". Through careful observation of juror 9 they notice that juror 4 had marks on the sides of his nose and as juror 9 asks why he had them, juror 4 explains that it's his glasses that caused those marks and they relate this back to the woman who testified as she had the same marks too. The jurors began to learn that if that woman wore glasses there is a chance she might not had worn them on the night of the murder, leaving her testimony doubtful since she "had to identify a person sixty feet away in the dark without glasses". Due to this reasoning it became difficult for jurors to establish a unanimous verdict. Another piece of evidence that was also under doubt was when witnesses heard the boy saying "I will kill you" to the father but never before the murder. This contradicted the other pieces of the boy's guilt. While juror 3 was explaining himself why he was defending the boy, in the heat of the moment juror 3 said "I'm going to tell you" to juror 8 and he replied with "So you really mean that". This gives juror 8 the opportunity to explain to the rest that it's could be a figure of speech and what is said shouldn't always taken as a literal way. This shows the many misperceptions and assumptions of the truth that can be taken from the given evidence, showing the efforts evidence has when coming to the verdict and how unreliable the truth can be if there is no evidence to back it up.

Additionally, rose highlights the possibility of the truth being corrupted or distorted due to the personal and social prejudice of certain jurors. Through the prejudice of some jurors represents how sometimes
