Abstract:- English language has turned out to be such a crucial aspect of higher education, as it has become a global language to teach numerous subjects at the university level. It could understandably have a major impact on the education in a country like Sri Lanka, which includes very few native speakers of English. However, one of the issues faced by university students in Sri Lanka is not being able to understand English tenses. Hence, this study attempts to investigate student's ability to learn English tenses. A case study was put in place to analyze the data collected through cluster sampling from three government universities of Sri Lanka, and it was discovered that most of the students struggle to understand the past tense while they tend to produce reasonably better sentences in present and future tense. Another notable finding was the students' lack of knowledge on verb forms, which is instrumental in mastering past tense. Students also seem to find ways to produce accurate future tense sentences using the helping verbs 'will' or 'would' along with the base form of verbs. The study has provided sufficient evidence to conclude that it is necessary to focus more on the past tense in comparison to present tense and future tense in order to improve the English writing skills of university students in Sri Lanka.

I. INTRODUCTION

A proper understanding of tenses is the key to mastering any language. Hence, the tenses have become a major component in English language learning and that is one of the reasons why tenses have been given a considerable attention at school. Usually, the best students from schools enter the university and after 13 years of learning English, they are expected to be fluent in this language, which has unfortunately not been the case. The lack of English knowledge within university students has been a major issue in most of the government universities. The manner in which the university students use English during spoken activities in particular indicates how they are struggling with the tenses, but the performance during a spoken activity could be influenced by factors such as anxiety, poor presentation skills and lack of communication skills in addition to knowledge in tenses. However, it is very clear that during a written activity there is virtually no chance of presentation skills and communication skills influencing the outcome, so it is thought that writing tasks could be considered as the best method of evaluating student's competency in tenses. Therefore, the prime objective of this study was to investigate the Sri Lankan university students' ability to learn tenses in English language.

II. LITERATURE REVIEW

An error analysis carried out by Cristina Rosado Romero and Carmen Gloria Garrido in the Universidad San Sebastián in Chile on the students' understanding of the twelve aspects of English language through a translation method has revealed that present perfect progressive has seen the highest frequency of errors. "A group of forty-eight native speakers of Spanish studying to become EFL teachers at Universidad San Sebastián participated in this study. All participants were first year students who had studied English tenses and aspects for a year in their English and Grammar. A translation into English of the letter written in Spanish was prepared and those sentences containing tenses studied in class which differed from the reconstructed version were identified."

The research has indicated that the "wrong choice of aspect is the main type of covert error. Present perfect progressive and present progressive show a high frequency of this type of error. From a pedagogical perspective, these results suggest that it would be helpful to implement remedial tasks to raise students' awareness of the importance of aspect to convey meaning. Utterances containing past perfect and simple future also showed a high frequency of covert errors, but the problem was not the wrong choice of aspect but the wrong choice of tense. To overcome problems using past perfect, we suggest that teachers use exercises that contrast the use of present perfect and past perfect since students seemed to over generalize the use of present perfect. Finally, some contrastive analysis between English and Spanish could help students internalize the use of simple future in English".

Dorothy V. M. Bishop in a research conducted in 2013 based on the problems faced by children when learning tenses, has revealed that "past two decades confirms that tense marking is often an area of particular difficulty."

III. METHODOLOGY

As the study attempted to explore the Sri Lankan university students' ability to understand tenses in English language, it

Vyhmeister,2001 A guide to writing theological research papers covering all aspects of the process ranging from choosing a topic to organizing and formatting the paper Essential English Grammar and Communication Strategies Adrian Wallwork,2022-06-29 This book is for university students with at least a mid intermediate level of English It is designed both for self study and also as a support for a course on academic communication

It can thus be used alongside the companion volumes Writing an Academic Paper in English and Giving an Academic Presentation in English. The book focuses only on those areas that are either the most commonly found in academic communication and/or cause the most problems. It is thus considerably more accessible than a traditional grammar or style guide. Grammar coverage includes articles, the countable vs. uncountable nouns, modal verbs (can, may, could, might), comparisons, present and past tenses, link words, prepositions, and verbs that cause grammatical difficulties. There is a strong focus on those elements that make a paper more readable and a presentation more accessible and memorable: clarity and empathy, sentence length, word order, and punctuation. There are chapters on two key areas of communication in academia: writing emails to editors and drafting a CV/resume. The book is laid out simply with short explanations and lots of example sentences plus typical mistakes. Other books in the series: Writing an Academic Paper in English, Giving an Academic Presentation in English. Adrian Wallwork is the author of more than 40 ELT and EAP textbooks. He has trained several thousand PhD students and researchers from around 50 countries to write research papers and give presentations. He is also the co-founder of e4ac.com, an editing agency for non-native English speaking researchers.
