

Sleep Deprivation Among College Students

Introduction

A college student that wants to receive that good grade point average at the end of the semester does not always receive the recommended six to eight hours of sleep every night. Not only is sleep just something we need, it is a necessity and is needed to keep our bodies healthy. This, as a college student, is a very typical way to get through four years of school, a lack of rest and a lot of homework. As a college student, we tend to spend more time in the library and socializing than to even think about laying our heads on our pillows, but while trying to sleep, a thousand things race through our minds as of how much we have to do the next day. Bridget Bosworth, in her essay "Are Tarleton Freshmen Sleep Deprived, and Why?

A Survey Analysis," states the issues of sleep deprivation of freshmen males and females, ages eighteen to forty-one, on campus. Bosworth states "What most people do not realize is how crucial a good night's sleep is to our bodies. In fact, sleep is a necessary factor to sustain life" (76). As well as, talking about what factors contribute to college freshmen's lack of sleep, such as, homework, socialization, and involuntary sleep deprivation. It is a given that there are more factors that cause sleep deprivation, but these are the main reasons in college students. After reading this article, I agree with Bosworth on her reasons why college students do not sleep because it points out exactly what college students do with their free time.

The Gift that Never Stops Giving

Homework; books, essays, etc. that make your life seem never ending, and one of the main reasons why college freshmen at Tarleton are sleep deprived. In Bosworth's article she talks about how being up late doing homework is a college student's main reason for sleep deprivation. In her article, Bosworth states "Another reason that students are losing sleep trying to get their homework is that they work all day and only have time to do it at night" (79). I agree with this quote because students that are juggling a job, Greek life, sports, and trying to manage good grades are all most likely sleep deprived. Having multiple things going on while going to college is a difficult thing to manage, but people that have to pay for their own schooling have to work. In the article "College students' homework and academic achievement: The mediating role of self-regulatory beliefs," written by Anastasia Kitsantas and Barry J. Zimmerman, they explain how homework in all grade levels is time consuming. Kitsantas and Zimmerman state that "Students reported that on the average approximately 4 hours and 25 minutes of homework in length were given daily." There are only so many hours in a day, and when students are overwhelmed with their studies and homework, there is only be so much available time to sleep. Without knowing how to manage time, students wait until
