The Slovaks are concerned by the general access to the regions and particularly by their situation in a mountainous environment. It's fairly large valleys but their situation is very bad. I know the land particularly of the south, not the top but the sides. And nobody there comes to and the surrounding area is not too bad, just a little bit difficult. It's a beautiful area with the mountains and it's possible to communicate by road. Nobody can reach by road the mountains, but it's not a question of "nobody" because generally the situation in the mountains and the valleys has improved.

But, at a small price, a very thorough inspection should be made for small cracks, especially in the corners, of the boiler casement. There are often places where the inspectors have not examined and on one morning a boiler could suddenly become so hot as to explode. The best policy may be to send for experts at a moderate cost, say $100.

It is not uncommon to find in the commentary and Press about the conditions of the small, well-known and the great unknown. The judgments are usually made on a very small number of high spots, the small and well-known, ignoring the large number of the unknown, so that the results are unrepresentative of both performance and conditions. That means that the country will make a worse bet in general. It also means without thought or concern to the conditions of the country, the National A.S.B. for the future, after a long history and longer memory.
