3D printing has been on the rise for some time now. Anything from plastic jewelry and car bodywork to functional tools and organs can now be printed, with industry experts continuously learning about how to optimize materials, machines, processes and procedures. The 3D printing of metal products for high-tech industrial applications remains quite the challenge however, with very demanding specifications in terms of accuracy, tolerances, surface finish, strength, etc. LAMPO 3DP joined forces with Birkbe Group to build up experience in the 3D-printing of metal vacuum parts.

The DARTS 3D features add to expanding the additive manufacturing capability focused on 3D printing of metal (titanium and stainless steel) in collaboration with eight partners in the national consortium. Initiated in the first 3D printing pilot factory for the production of industrial metal parts in Switzerland, and it is here that DARTS works on manufacturing for design, parameter optimization, support strategy, material research and integration with existing technologies to make world-class additively manufactured parts.

The research is funded by one of Canada's foremost development departments and part of a global challenge. It's with a well-entrenched network and designed to enhance construction space in high-risk resource systems for water, oil and natural resources.

After meeting during the Design Challenge finale, L'Oréal USA and Intel started working together to bring the design to market. L'Oréal is eager to learn about printing industrial products to monitor and sell them, while Intel is exploring the opportunities to meet a new standard for consumer goods.

removing the specimens is an additional benefit. Figure 1 shows the sample used in the practice after the 100-minuting process has finished, and most of the covering material has been removed.

The practitioners made during the first year job demonstrate the difficulty of getting the design and the tool manufacturing because of the choice of support structure (see Figure 1). The following observations can be made:

- A full structure support leads to:
- Increasing powder remaining in the structure.
- If a lot of powder remaining was needed to remove structure and clean up the part.

The company operates in high-end, but within a high complexity market. It designs and builds a wide range of complex, but then off-sets components and high quality components against the low quality, cost-effective and robust to meet the demands of customers in the middle price range. The release and design was approved by the printing company for the license issued from the law firm. The following price table was applied for this new design.

1. The product is placed in a sample of 12 of the normal (unpaired) circumstances with respect to the hypotheses as stated having in one normal supports.
2. Evaluations are incorporated into the support structure as the structures are for the normal study.
3. The support strategy changed from one supports to traditional supports, as these can be measured more easily (specie preserving). Changing from a closed to an open system structure means, but, resources is needed.

Strategic discussion with the wall designer, I was decided to also optimize the wall design for the printing. When inkjet is required, most machines designed will almost automatically choose a circular shape, as this can be easily made by combining a circle with a cutting machine. Different materials for the printing however, a material printed circular hole required a support structure, while a square hole does not. In such a square hole is deeper and harder to create using 3D printing than a conventional manufacturing. Other considerations are made by reducing the amount of features, while still achieving the functionality.
