Are Cell Phones Really Necessary?

Cell phones are everywhere. They are an integral part of society, and most adults around the world have one. Many people believe that cell phones are an essential part of life that brought us in a variety of ways, such as allowing us to communicate anywhere and anytime. However, it can be argued that cell phones are taking over people's time and decreasing our ability to communicate face to face. If people are not careful, the next generation will grow into another generation who cannot think or survive without the use of a cell phone. This is why cell phones are not necessary and should be banned.

For thousands of years, people survived without the use of technology, and in particular, cell phones. Just thirty years ago, people did not rely on the use of cell phones, and only a small percentage of the population even owned one, those who owned very carefully and used often. Some people argue that cell phones have improved our lives and made us more educated. However, there are many ways cell phones have actually made us less educated and unable to produce value for ourselves. For example, instead of finding out the solution to a problem ourselves, we now simply use the internet on our phones and find the answer within seconds.

Are Cell Phones Really Necessary?

Mobile phones are everywhere. They are an integral part of society, and most adults around the world have one. However, many people believe that cell phones are taking over and decreasing people's ability to communicate face to face. While these concerns are understandable, it is still true that cell phones are necessary and, if used responsibly, are a very important and useful tool in modern life.

What is the thesis statement?

How does the author provide background information on the topic?

Finally, cell phones are a necessary aspect of modern-day life because they are a convenient way for people to continue to work and communicate while away from their offices. For example, if an employer is working remote or is on a business trip, their cell phone allows them to stay in contact with clients and colleagues. By using their cell phone, important information can still be received and sent, even when someone is without their laptop. Cell phones are no longer used just for making phone calls. People send emails and access the internet on their phones, and many people use them to record important information. After all, a cell phone is much easier and more convenient to carry around than a laptop.

What are the reasons and evidence the author provides to support the claim?

Does the author focus and support either side of the argument?

Does the author address or reject the other side of the argument in a way?
