

A 3x3 grid of animal illustrations. Each illustration is labeled with the animal's name and a number. The animals are: zebra (1), polar bear (2), saber tooth tiger (3), tiger (4), horse (5), leopard (6), kangaroo rat (7), panda (8), and raccoon (9). The grid is set against a background of green grass and a blue sky with white clouds. The entire grid is enclosed in a black border.

CREATING A DICHOTOMOUS KEY

OBJECTIVE: Create a dichotomous key to identify all of the nine organisms below.

STUDY MATERIALS:

1. Background: A dichotomous key is a tool that allows you to identify an organism by answering a series of questions. Each question has two possible answers, which lead you to the next question. The key is called "dichotomous" because it branches into two paths at each step. The questions are usually based on observable characteristics of the organism, such as its shape, size, color, and habitat. The final answer is the name of the organism.
2. Procedure: To create a dichotomous key, you first need to list all the organisms you want to identify. Then, you choose a characteristic that can distinguish between two groups. This becomes the first question. You then repeat the process for each group, choosing a new characteristic that distinguishes between two subgroups. You continue this process until you have identified every organism. The key is written as a series of numbered questions and answers, with the organism's name at the end of each path.

ANALYSIS: The dichotomous key is a useful tool for identifying organisms. It is especially helpful for identifying organisms that are difficult to distinguish by other means. The key is also a good way to learn about the characteristics of different organisms. By following the key, you can learn what features are unique to each organism and how they relate to its classification.
