Simulating Roman Economies Tom Brughmans, Andrew Wilson, 2022 The use of formal modelling and computational simulation in studies of the Roman economy has become more common over the last decade But detailed critical evaluations of this innovative approach are still missing and much needed What kinds of insights about the Roman economy can it lead to that could not have been obtained through more established approaches and how do simulation methods constructively enhance research processes in Roman Studies This edited volume addresses this need through critical discussion and convincing examples It presents the Roman economy as a highly complex system traditionally studied through critical examinations of material and textual sources and understood through a wealth of diverging theories A key contribution of simulation lies in its ability to formally represent diverse theories of Roman economic phenomena and test them against empirical evidence Critical simulation studies rely on collaboration across Roman data theory and method specialisms and can constructively enhance multivocality of theoretical debates of the Roman economy This potential is illustrated avoiding computational and mathematical language through simulation studies of a wealth of Roman economic phenomena from maritime trade and terrestrial transport infrastructures through the economic impacts of the Antonine Plague and demography to local cult economies and grain trade Through these examples and discussions this volume aims to provide the common ground guidance and inspiration needed to make simulation methods part of the tools of the trade in Roman Studies and to allow them to make constructive contributions to our understanding of the Roman economy

Connected by the Sea Lucy Blue, Frederick M. Hocker, Anton Englert, 2016-03-31 The 10th International Symposium on Boat and Ship Archaeology was held in Roskilde Denmark in 2003 The theme of the meeting was Connected by the Sea and was designed to emphasize the role of the sea seafaring and watercraft as bridges rather than barriers Maritime archaeology tends to take place within national borders with a national focus yet the very premise of seafaring is the desire to travel beyond the horizon to establish contact with other places and cultures The conference theme was chosen to encourage the maritime archaeological community to think in international terms
