

How to proofread your writing: an example

Here's the original draft with annotations:

From kittens and ~~the~~ puppies ~~two~~ to soon-to-be predators, there is just something about a baby animal that tugs at the heartstrings and elicits viral popularity on social media. But why do humans find baby animals so adorable?

Seeking the answers through research

[redacted] Decades of scientific research has explored the psychology behind this attraction. In 1943 zoologist Konrad Lorenz was the first to suggest that all infants have common features that are universally appealing to our powerful human nurturing instinct (Lorenz, DATE?). These ~~features~~ features include the large head, chubby cheeks, and round bodies that characterise our own babies.

What's more, certain behaviours ~~are-finding~~ have been found to have a common cross-species ~~apparel~~ appeal, such as playful natures and unsteady, clumsy walks. Simply put, these baby animals remind us of our own tottering toddlers.

Moreover, a great many studies have confirmed that humans prefer images of infants to adults, something that is hardwired into human psychology and reinforced by cultural practices and media, ~~which is hardwired by.~~

~~In conclusion~~ In conclusion

It seems therefore, that as humans we cannot escape the inevitability of a viral baby animal video – we should just embrace it and enjoy that warm fuzzy feeling.
