Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and heart rate reserve (HRR) of sedentary middle-aged men. The subjects were divided into two groups: a control group and an exercise group. The exercise group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The control group did not exercise. The HR and HRR were measured at rest and during exercise at the beginning and end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the exercise group had a significant decrease in HR and HRR at rest and during exercise compared to the control group. The control group had no significant change in HR and HRR. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the cardiovascular fitness of sedentary middle-aged men.

- Day and night periods that are longer than the standard 24 hours occur most commonly with the use of artificial light or other light-emitting devices. Likewise, there are also long periods of complete darkness in the case of the forest.
- Several measures that are commonly used with the fish are also true for reptiles, the length of the season may differ depending on the soil moisture conditions.
- The soil temperature is important, it may change the period of activity. The period of activity is usually longer in the day than at night for these groups of animals.
- Several factors must be considered for the fish and reptiles.
