

Federalism Paper Over Obamacare And Donald Trump

One of the things that keeps the U.S. from dissolving into an anarchy, is the system of government that was created for the young nation back in 1787. In order to effectively run and keep order on a large democracy such as the United States, there is a need for an organized system of government such as the three branches system that we have currently. The branches of the American government system are the judicial, executive, and legislative branches which each serve their own distinct purpose in trying to maintain the power of the government under balance. When all three groups execute their individual roles then it allows a manner for efficiency and progress to be made in the U.S. One such example of what can be accomplished when all three groups work together is the creation of legislation that is ideally supposed to fix a current issue in the country and provide a solution to better the lives of the American people. The act was created to address the rate of uninsured people and was pitched as "healthcare is a right not a privilege". The goal of the Act was to attain a 94% rate of Americans covered by health insurance which was to be done in 10 years keeping under the $900 billion limit set by President Barack Obama. Coffin and Rak talk about there were many benefits that were a part of the legislation such as extending the dependent coverage to 26, elimination of lifetime limits on insurance coverage, the prohibition of denying children with pre-existing conditions insurance coverage, mandates that employers provide insurance coverage and it provides coverage for those uninsured without increasing the cost of healthcare. Besides the patient advantages there are benefits for physicians as well such as "having more control over treatment decisions due to the elimination of coverage exclusions for preexisting conditions and patient access to preventative services", less insurance bureaucratic paperwork, a standardization of the rules for the confidential exchange of health information, and also financial security to practices that follow the Act (Coffin and Rak).

The point of the Affordable Care Act according to Davis et.al is placing great
