While Phosphorus (P) and Sulfur (S) are essential nutrients for plants, their availability is often limited in soils. Phosphorus (P) is a key nutrient for plant growth and development, and its deficiency can lead to stunted growth and reduced yields. Sulfur (S) is also an essential nutrient for plants, and its deficiency can lead to similar symptoms. The availability of these nutrients in the soil is influenced by various factors, including soil pH, soil texture, and the presence of other nutrients. In this study, we investigated the effects of P and S fertilization on the growth and yield of a crop under different soil conditions. The results showed that P and S fertilization significantly increased the growth and yield of the crop, particularly in soils with low P and S levels. The optimal P and S rates for maximizing crop yield were determined, and the results provide valuable information for farmers and agronomists. The study also highlights the importance of P and S fertilization in sustainable agriculture and the need for further research to optimize nutrient management practices.
