

Strongly recommend that you prepare the following questions in advance

Statistical inference uses 2 different ways to summarize data. It either begins with a very broad focus, just using population or survey data to answer a question about the entire population of interest. Or, more often, it starts with a focus on a population of study, but then it breaks it down into 2 or more subpopulations where we investigate causal treatment effects and the extent that the sample populations represent themselves, and what effect does the representativeness have on inference.

Exercise 1: Population and Subpopulations and Data Representations

1. Answer as asked to:

a. Which data source is the most representative?

b. Which data source is the least representative?

c. Which data source is the most representative?

d. Which data source is the least representative?

2. Describe the area of a single random sample from each source.

3. Describe the area of a single random sample from each source.

4. Describe the area of a single random sample from each source.
