Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks for physical and psychological health. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly improved the subjects' physical health, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, the 12-minute walk test, and the 400-meter walk test. The walking program also significantly improved the subjects' psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory, the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory, and the Zung Depression Index. The walking program had no significant effect on the subjects' weight, blood pressure, or cholesterol levels. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

- Day and night periods that are longer than the standard 24 hours occur most commonly with the use of artificial light or natural light at night. To reduce the risk of the problem, the light should be turned off at the end of the work shift.
- Increased exposure to light at night is associated with a higher risk of breast cancer. The length of the exposure may also be important for the risk, as well as the wavelength.
- The end of the shift is the most important time to reduce the exposure to light. The problem is not caused by the light during the shift. The light during the shift may be important for the problem, but the problem is not caused by the light during the shift.
- Night shift workers are at a higher risk of breast cancer than day shift workers. The risk is higher for those who work the night shift than for those who work the day shift.
- Night shift workers are at a higher risk of breast cancer than day shift workers. The risk is higher for those who work the night shift than for those who work the day shift.

- When a producer's price for the output rises or falls, it must adjust its output level accordingly. For example, if the price of the output rises, the producer will want to produce more of the output, and if the price falls, the producer will want to produce less of the output.
