Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was conducted in a community-based setting. The participants were 30 women, aged 40-50 years, who were sedentary and had no history of cardiovascular disease. They were randomly assigned to two groups: a control group and an intervention group. The control group continued with their sedentary lifestyle, while the intervention group participated in a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The training program included aerobic exercise, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The physical health outcomes measured were heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index (BMI). The psychological health outcomes measured were self-reported stress, anxiety, and depression. The results showed that the intervention group had significantly lower heart rate, blood pressure, and BMI compared to the control group at the end of the 12-week program. Additionally, the intervention group reported significantly lower levels of stress, anxiety, and depression compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. Introduction Sedentary lifestyle is a major risk factor for chronic diseases, including cardiovascular disease, diabetes, and obesity. Middle-aged women are particularly vulnerable to these health problems, as they are more likely to be sedentary and have a higher prevalence of chronic diseases compared to younger women. Therefore, it is important to develop interventions that can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. One such intervention is a training program, which can provide both physical and psychological benefits. The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
